The Flower School Chap- 3 Class- 7

This poem depicts poet's longing for his deceased mother. The poet starts by portraying a rainy day scene from the cloudy sky and shower coming down in the month of June. The wind passing through the bamboo bower produces a melodious sound. In the beginning scene, the flower blossoms out of nowhere and dance joyfully, here the poet converses with his mother, saying he feels the flowers go to school underground, where they learn their lesson behind the shut doors; and their teachers do not let them come out to play.

However, when the rain falls, they have their holidays; in the rains the branches of the trees in the forest clash, the loud clouds make noise by clapping their big hands, at the time, "the flower-children" come out dressed in vibrant colours.

In the last stanza, the poet longs for his deceased mother, which arouses pathos in the readers' minds. The poet asks his mother, if she knew the flowers have too were in the sky among the stars. He again asks her, if she had not noticed how eager the flowers always were to get back to their home.

The last line of the poem brings tears to the eyes of the readers. The poet says, he knows why the flowers raise their arms to the sky. They do so because their mothers are in the sky, exactly like the poet's mother, who also became a star, in the sky, after her demise.
